Seventeen seventy-six—Hail! a mighty nation!
Born, July the Fourth, by that great Declaration
Which made our native country free,
The cradle of sweet liberty!

—C. C. H.

Foreword

CENTRAL graduates have regarded the BRECKY as the link which remains between them and the old school. In it they see pictured the faces of old friends, with facts about them which call to life memories of a half-forgotten past. In it they read articles reminiscent of school activities which were so dear to them in their short stay at Central. In it they see their old teachers, their surroundings, and everything that was so familiar. In short, they see the spirit of Central as it was to their class, and as it always will be to them individually.

So important a book should not be a makeshift. It should have enduring qualities. The 1926 BRECKY Staff has endeavored to give the class a BRECKY unique in its construction, yet based on the same solid foundations as in the past. It has taken for its theme the development of the nation from a small cluster of colonies in 1776 to a world power in 1926, as its part in the celebration of America's sesquicentennial.

To carry out this theme it has employed the arts of pen and brush. The title pages are the most striking examples. On them in pictorial form are the different periods of American history. Opposite these pages are decorative examples of the poet's art, describing the changes in custom and costume in the hundred-and-fifty-year period. The articles are also indicative of the theme. There is one on early schools in America. To show the growth of cooperation there is an article on school cooperation, describing the activities of the students in Central, a typically modern school. Our splendid music room, with its modern facilities, has its share of attention. The Dramatic Association, now a mighty force in the school, is described in detail. The list of charter members of the National Honor Society, a new development in education, is one of the special features of this year's BRECKY.

The decorative scheme of the book is thoroughly up to date. Silhouettes are especially prominent among illustrators this year.

The plan of the biographical section of the 1926 BRECKY is also new. This section is, of course, the bulk of the book. It is the part most read and reread. The old form of biography has given place to a tabulated form, which leaves nothing to be desired in the way of information. The honors, activities, and future schools are all listed. All honors are awarded on a seven-semester basis. It is always impossible to include the eighth semester achievements, because the BRECKY goes to press before many awards are made. A place on the scholarship honor roll is awarded to the pupil who has received 75 percent E's in seven semesters. All awards made by the school are considered as honors, and, in addition to these, positions of trust in school activities for which the school offers no material reward. The whole biography section presents a new appearance, with its vertical instead of horizontal grouping of pictures.

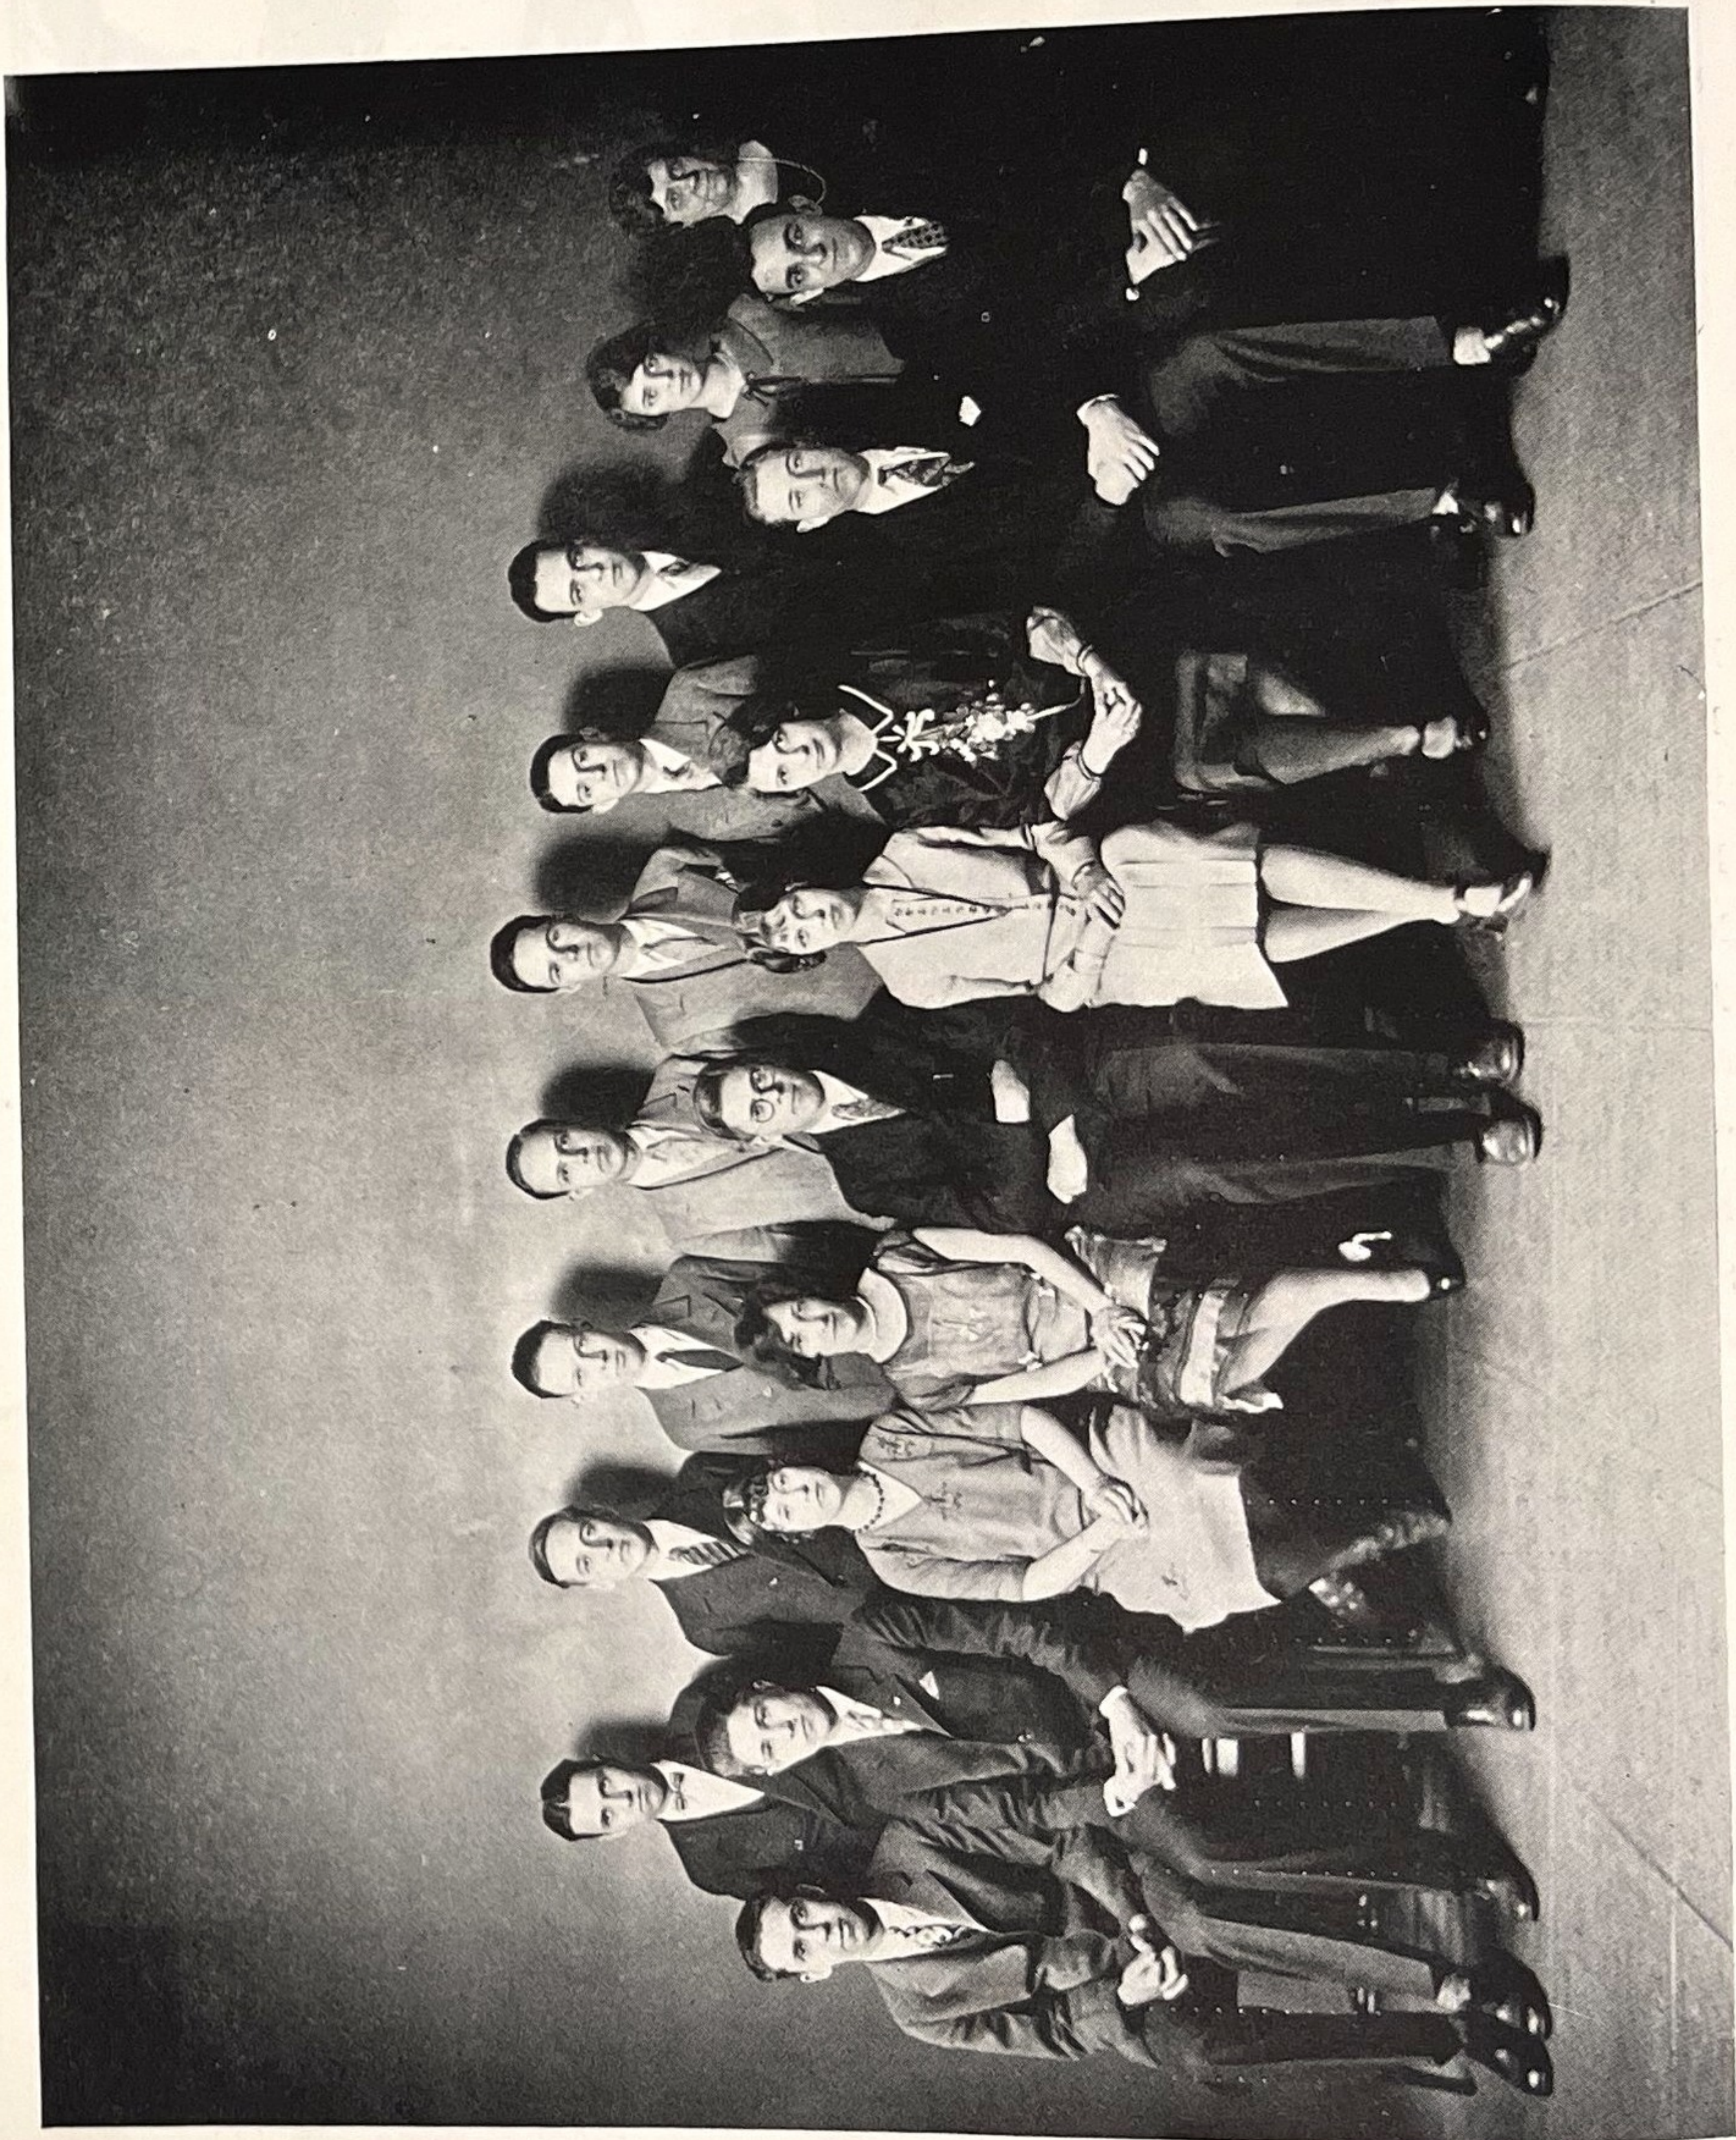

The staff hopes that it has given to the classes of 1926 a BRECKY which will be hallowed with fond memories of pleasant associations long after the parting of the ways.

W. R. BELFIELD.

Military

A hundred years ago, there was
No poison gas to kill;
No aeroplane—no submarine,
And tanks unheard of still;
A hundred years from now, we hope
For peace and for good will.

The National Honor Society

ENTRAL'S supremacy has again been recognized in an entirely new field. Not in the field of athletics, dramatics, or debate, but in the field of scholarship, character, and service has she again excelled.

When the Association of Superintendents and the Association of Secondary School Principals decided to hold a convention in Washington, the National Honor Society invited us to have a chapter of the Society, and to hold the installation as an exhibition meeting before the Association of Secondary School Principals.

This Honor Society has a nation-wide membership of honor students in secondary schools. It is a Society with the avowed purpose of publicly commending scholarship, character, and service among the students of the secondary schools of the nation. The percentage of students in one chapter is, of necessity, limited. Therefore, the selection of members must be made very carefully, and with fine distinction as to eligibility for membership. So the Society decided to use the method adopted by Phi Beta Kappa, the college honor fraternity. The upper one-fourth of the senior class is selected upon the basis of scholarship. After this list has been submitted to the entire faculty for recommendation, the names of these students are then brought before a council of faculty members. This council, after due consideration of scholarship and school service, designates the member of the Society. The council also designates 5 percent of a class during its sixth semester. Then, when that class moves to the seventh semester, 5 percent more are chosen. This process is repeated when the class moves forward to the eighth semester. This procedure gives all the upper-class pupils an opportunity for membership. Thus it may be seen that the students must meet most rigid requirements to become members of the Honor Society.

The installation of the Alpha Chapter was held in conjunction with the meeting of the Association of Secondary School Principals, which was held in the Central High School Auditorium during the week of February 22, 1926. The formal initiation took place before a gathering of the principals on Wednesday, February 24, 1926. Dr. Edward Ryneerson, president of the National Council of the Honor Society, presided. Dr. Ryneerson opened the initiation with a short speech of welcome to the new members of the Honor Society, and introduced Mr. Miller. After a short commendatory speech by Mr. Miller, the gathering was favored by an organ selection by Mr. Wood. A speech in answer to Dr. Ryneerson's welcome was made in behalf of the students by Mr. Morton Wilner. Then came the most impressive moment of the initiation. The entire chapter rose and repeated the initiation pledge of the Society, the text of which is as follows:

"I will be a loyal member of Central's Honor Society, steadfast in my purpose to abide by the right, to serve all just causes, and to seek the truth with my whole heart, both in books and in life."

The speaker of the day, Dr. P. P. Claxton, was then introduced by Dr. Ryneerson. He delivered a most comprehensive address upon the value of education to the members of the younger generation in their worldly careers. The chapter then rose and sang "Tenax Propositi," concluding the initiation.

The occasion will long be remembered by those who witnessed it as a milestone in school history. It was the setting of a new ideal for succeeding generations to strive for. It was the kindling of a bright light, which will shine forever, dispelling the gloom of ignorance. It was the dawn of a new era in school activities. Central has had another mark of honor blazoned on her shield of distinction, which she will carry, "steadfast of purpose," through the years to come.

Concerning Early Schools in America

"Reading, 'riting, and 'rithmetic," the fundamentals of education, have been taught in many ways and under various conditions since education was first introduced in America.

The pioneers in America brought with them a desire for knowledge; many of them were among the most brilliant graduates of Cambridge. Laws were passed at an early date in New England providing for the establishment of schools in all communities of over fifty families. In the beginning the chief idea in the minds of those establishing educational institutions was religious enlightenment, but this seems to have to some extent given way to the idea of general culture.

Early schools were both private and public institutions. A certain amount of knowledge in reading and writing was necessary to attend the public schools, and private schools generally served to give this elementary instruction. In many cases this primary education was given at home by parents.

The absence of towns and the existence of plantations with miles between neighbors made schools impracticable in the South and West. Here we find the private tutor and itinerant instructor dispensing education. It was not until the twenty-five-year period following the Civil War that free public schools were established in the South and West.

In the desire to make the grammar school more effective and possibly more popular, it was not always kept in the same place. In many towns conflicts were frequent between the ardent advocates of a central grammar school and those who wished and believed that it should be made as far-reaching as possible. Frequently certain areas were divided into districts with each district having the benefit of the school a certain length of time—four or five months. Sometimes under this plan it would take two or three years to complete the circuit. The grammar school, whether stationary or moving, did not supply educational opportunities for all pupils; many lived at too great distances to attend; many parents held strong convictions that the schools were inadequate. Hence school matters occasioned stormy quarrels in the ancient town meeting. These conflicts went on from generation to generation.

Like other great institutions, the high school came into existence by steps so gradual that its origin can not be referred to any year or even decade. Records of its establishment are traced to 1840 and 1850. Boston took the lead in secondary education, and the Boston Latin School holds the distinction of being the oldest high school in the United States.

Early schools were founded by charitable individuals, churches, and communities, and were maintained through fees from the pupils. Under this system, however, they could not impose compulsory attendance on the poor.

Attempts were made to provide for universal education through legislative enactment. Much of the earlier education defeated its own end. Whether it provided for the attendance of the poor at school without the payment of school

Central's Part in the N. E. A. Convention

Central welcomed the superintendents of the Department of Superintendents of the National Education Association during the week of their convention, which began February 19, of which Dr. Randall J. Condon, of Cincinnati, is president, and Dr. Frank W. Ballou, vice-president.

All the various departments exhibited the numerous types of work which they produce. Miss Emily F. Sleman, Mrs. Page Kirk, and Miss Jessie Baker formed the Central Committee which made the arrangements.

The general exhibit was held in the library, which was supplemented in the classrooms, corridors, and laboratories. Besides his violin, Edward Davis displayed a buffet which he had made. There were also an inlaid table and a set of chessmen on display. The original designs by the architectural boys for the decoration of the library, lunch room, and armory were shown.

The language classes exhibited sets of papers and special work. On the Latin table was everything from Mother Goose rhymes in Latin and a medallion of Caesar by Mary V. Smith to models of Roman siege operations by Robert Chapin and Marlow Perry.

The English department exhibit included charts, tabulations, short stories, plays, and excellent papers of class work and book reviews. This exhibit also included a miniature theater showing a scene from "The Ancient Mariner," the characters for which were manipulated by magnets.

The publications office showed some of its best work of the past, and some of the steps in the preparation of a newspaper, a linoleum cut or a half-tone.

Classes in crafts installed new exhibits, which consisted of jewelry and art-metal work. Jewelry in the making was demonstrated and the tools employed and steps in fashioning were on view.

Free-hand drawing classes exhibited samples of all grades of work, sketches, and water-color drawings in the third floor corridor. The posters for the spring play changed the corridor into a fairyland of fantastic designs and a riot of colors.

For the convenience of the visitors large framed posters were hung in the corridors with the points of interest around school and where they were to be found. There were several booths of information located at the main entrance to the auditorium. One of these was conducted by the Cog, and the other was under the direction of teachers, headed by Mr. Schwartz of Eastern. The "post office" was an additional feature for the convenience of our guests.

Five meetings of the National Association of Secondary School Principals of the N. E. A. were held at Central. On February 22 a meeting in the auditorium discussed "Internationalism" and "The World Court."

Three of the five meetings were held on February 23—one in the morning in the auditorium; two in the afternoon, one in the auditorium, the other in the Music Room. The morning meeting brought forth "High Spots in Secondary Education." At this meeting plans of organization and

Musicitis

"Listen to those shrieks, Peggy!"

"My, my," sighed Peggy, "doesn't that bring something to your mind, Gene?"

"So it does. They're from the Music Room, and we each have lessons to make up. How about doing it now? You know we have only two weeks before Senior Day. Come on, Peggy; we'll have to hurry if we intend to get there before the bell rings."

Alas! Just as they were running up the steps the bell rang. What would Mr. Wood say? They were soon to find out.

"Well, girls," inquired Mr. Wood, "where do you think you are bound for? You know you are tardy, and can not enjoy this happy period with us."

After Peggy cast an appealing glance at Gene, the latter gained courage, and appealed to Mr. Wood in her sweetest way.

"Can't you understand," she concluded, "that this is our last chance to make up our so-called unexcused absences?"

"Since your argument is so convincing, I suppose I'll have to let you stay. You've taken enough of the class time, so hurry and sign your slips." Mr. Wood sighed, as if he were sorry the weaker sex had the better of him once again.

As soon as all slips were signed, Mr. Wood gave the page of the song to be sung. Immediately a number of groans issued from the class. It was one of those solemn, drawn-out songs that were not half so interesting as such popular music as "Thanks for the Buggy Ride!" It was more cheering, however, when Gene and Peggy discovered that the boys were to practice their part for some time, giving the girls a chance to let off their steam.

"Why so quiet, Gene, old dear?" questioned Peggy.

"Nothing; I'm just thinking! I was just wondering if it really is true that we are seniors, and are almost ready to graduate from dear Central. Do you remember a few years ago when we were insignificant youngsters—mere ROOKIES?"

"I'll say I do. I never will forget the day I came up here to the Music Room, and Mr. Hoover and Mr. Wood teased me so that I beat it downstairs, only to be reminded the following week that I had a lesson to make up. I didn't know what that meant, but I soon found out that all I had to do was come in here and sleep for a period! But, Gene, do you remember how important you felt when you became a Soph?"

A smile flickered over Gene's face, as she answered Peggy's question. "Do I remember? Why, I do believe that was the proudest day of my life. I never will forget how triumphant I felt to ride on the street cars and let everyone see my second-year books. And how important we felt up here; how we used to tease the poor little Rookies. The next step—or our Junior year—how do you class that in your memories?"

Peggy had plenty to say on this subject. "My Junior year was such fun and so carefree. You joined the Orchestra last year, didn't you? Maybe you enjoyed it, but you

Student Cooperation

"But where do all these boys and girls come from—are they students or are they on the school pay roll—what is—?" The speaker was just a man, but he was a 100 percent example of the many men and women who visit our school. I called him to me and told him that, if he could spare the time, I would take him through the building and try to answer his numerous questions about our splendid student cooperation.

We started with the office, and, if I do say it, everyone surely did look industrious. Two girls were vigorously filing enrollment cards. At the switchboard a boy was trying to teach one of his classmates how to put in a call. Over by the counter an apparently nerve-racked girl was teaching some half-frightened-to-death-looking rookies how to make out tardy slips.

My open-eyed guest started to open his mouth—"These pupils are from the Office Training Class, which itself offers only a half credit a semester, but by spending three extra periods a week in work designated by the teacher in charge a full credit may be obtained. In the office the prospective business girl and boy gets actual experience. We shall see other divisions of the Office Training Class as we go along." All this was in answer to his unasked questions. As we started to leave, my guest wanted to know who the three bobbed-haired girls were that seemed to be giving all the orders. I whispered that they were not students, but were Miss Alice Craig, Mrs. Janet Marshall, and Miss Sarah Stephens, respectively, all of whom are actual members of the office force.

From there we went to the lunch room. The passing bell had just rung for the fourth hour. As we stood looking at the menu, ten or twelve boys came rushing in and took their places almost automatically behind the lunch counter and started putting foodstuffs on the counter. "These boys spend the first 15 minutes of their lunch hour in working. In return for their services they are allowed 30 cents worth of lunch. The girls that you see sitting at the table at the end of the line are paid in the same way. One girl estimates the cost of your lunch, while the other acts as cashier. As we left the lunch room, we passed the candy booth. Here, again, a student had full charge, getting his lunch in return for service.

We entered the teachers' lunch room. Several boys stood behind the counter doing practically the same things that the boys we had just seen had been doing. It was late in the fourth period, and my guest questioned my statement that the students helped during the first fifteen minutes of their lunch hour. "This does not hold true for help in the teachers' lunch room, for here the pupils work the full hour. They also collect the used dishes from the tables and make the tables tidy for the next occupant. These people, however, are allowed more lunch to make up for more labor.

"Passing through the tunnel, we entered the laundry. The fourth hour was over, and things were very quiet. While we were looking the place over, a boy appeared with a basket of towels from the swimming pool.

Dramatics in Central High School

Dramatic training as a school activity has come to be an important part of the extra-curricular work in most large high schools in the country. The reasons for the popularity of this activity with both the teachers and the students are twofold: First, by presenting plays a popular diversion is offered and a revenue for carrying on other activities is obtained; and, second, the members themselves benefit greatly by the training.

Here at Central the Dramatic Association stands close to the top as a school activity. In a review of our four years at Central, the Spring Play stands out in each year as one of the important events.

Central's Dramatic Association has always done its share in bringing money into the school coffers through its plays and in training the "young idea" how to act. Few people realize when they see a Central production the hours of work which hundreds of people, students and teachers alike, give to a play. To the cast it means giving up every afternoon to rehearsal, going over every line and every bit of business until each is thoroughly mastered and the play is a smooth-running, easily understood piece of dramatic work worthy to go on the Central stage. The stage crew, the sewing and art departments, the Bank, and other organizations put in equally long and arduous labor to contribute their part to the success of the whole. All this is done for a few performances before the public.

Why, you ask, do the school authorities allow so much valuable time to be put on anything which has no actual connection with studies? There are numerous reasons. The most important is the training the people who work on the play get along their chosen lines of endeavor. Most people must conquer a certain timidity, nervousness, or self-consciousness before they can be successful in the game of life. All these things the young actor learns to overcome during those afternoons of rehearsal. A good speaking voice and the ability to make one's self heard in a large hall is an invaluable asset to anyone. Before appearing in a Central play our budding Thespians must be able to make themselves heard and understood in our auditorium. In addition to the practice the members of the Dramatic Association receive in acting, those who work along other lines to make the play a success are getting practical training in the work they have chosen as their school interest.

Central's Spring Plays for the last four years are an interesting study of dramatic art. They have been chosen to represent the great classes of drama. First we had Twelfth Night, one of the greatest comedies of Shakespeare, the greatest dramatist the world has ever known. Then came Trelawny of the Wells, by Arthur Wing Pinero. In our Junior year we saw Stop Thief, a melodramatic farce, enjoyable, modern, but lacking in dramatic worth. Undoubtedly, however, the play which will remain longest in our memory is Maeterlinck's Bluebird, which we saw in our Senior year. Dramatic critics both in and out of the school predicted failure, for even a professional company might well shy at

Classes

One hundred fifty years of growth and independence;
One hundred fifty years of glory and resplendence—
Until today we joyous lads and lasses,
The members of the present Central classes,
Set out at last on Life's long, rocky way,
With hopes to reach the heights some future day!

February Class Poem

LIFE'S not an idle, vaguely chang dream
That we may muse and theorize about.
Our trivial dreams, or even thoughts profound,
Do little toward the gaining of an aim.
Intentions, reasons, do not place our name
In either Halls of Fame, or hearts of men.
To light a light where once was gloom, to grow
A flower where once was none, is the desire
Of most of us. And now we say good-bye
To school, and start upon the way again,
But in the coming college life we'll know
The lessons well that life in school has taught.
We've climbed the first low step of life, and seem
Not loath to leave. New steps do not confound
Our minds when every theory cries out
For use, and dreams to higher things aspire.
If then we seize our opportunity,
And aspirations into deeds translate,
We will achieve our goal—a life that's fraught
With dreams expressed—and open wide the gate
That guards the pathway to success and fame.

February Class History

IN THE winter of 1622 a group of travelers arrived in the New World, and landed upon the bleak coast of Virginia at the little settlement of Jamestown. They ventured into this unknown land with fear and awe, coming in contact with strange people who had strange customs and laws, but they resolved to settle down and become a part of this new life and take advantage of the opportunities which they found all about them.

In 1922 a group of travelers entered the foreign halls of Central to make new friends and to become accustomed to the environment of study found in this great institution.

1622-1922! Three hundred years have passed, and many changes have taken place, but the fundamental principles of civilization are the same: Sixteen hundred and twenty-two, ever looking forward to new places and new conquests—1922, ever looking forward to new light and new appreciation of the world of learning. So as our forefathers stepped upon the strange coast of Virginia we, the class of 1926, inspired by their courage, stepped through the doors of Central to begin a new and different life.

It was a gloomy and dark February morning when a happy crowd of green rookies came into the halls of Central. We looked forward to the four years we were to spend here with joy—joy because we had heard that our high-school days were the best days of our lives. But with this joy there was an intermingling of dread, for the path ahead of us was a stony one and lessons lay like rocks for us to stumble over. Although the road was rough, we determined not to fall but to conquer. Of course, being Freshies, we were not expected to accomplish much the first year. We did, however, make the acquaintance of many new studies. We also met new teachers and the principal, Mr. Maurer. At first we were secretly afraid of him, but, as the term advanced, we learned to respect and admire him.

At last the day came when we were no longer the timid Freshmen, but proud Sophomores, becoming more interested in the activities of the school. We entered this year with added determination, taking up our new subjects with enthusiasm. Though we studied hard, still we found time to join in the activities of the school, each striving onward to the goal of his ambitions.

It was during this semester that we witnessed the dedication of the Emory Wilson Stadium, which Mr. Maurer strove so hard to accomplish. It is due to Mr. Wilson's life-long efforts that we have this wonderful institution today. Inasmuch as Mr. Wilson was a firm supporter of athletics, surely we can find no more fitting monument to him than this stadium.

At the end of our Sophomore year we learned that Mr. Maurer was to leave us. Though this was a severe blow, the shock was mollified by the announcement that Mr. Kramer, Assistant Superintendent of Schools, and a former Centralite, was to take his place at the beginning of our third year at Central. Under his guidance we added to the successes of the preceding years the baseball championship, and the much coveted Competitive Drill.

Thus we entered our final and best year at Central. The administration changed for the third time during our sojourn at Central, Mr. Kramer being replaced by one of our faculty—well known to us all—Mr. Alvin W. Miller. With Mr. Miller's able leadership and assistance this year has been a prosperous and happy one. School activities have improved, and through the cooperation and backing of the student body and faculty we have enjoyed many victories in athletics, the outstanding one being the 1925 football championship.

Now, as we gather here for the last time, our feelings may be likened to those of our forefathers who, when they had achieved happiness in Virginia, were not satisfied but ventured on to the westward, again looking for greater fields to conquer, in which to achieve a higher pinnacle of success.

As they bade farewell to their homes in Virginia and ventured westward, we, the class of 1926, bid farewell to Central, our happy home for the past four years, and step from its halls forever into new fields of endeavor, each striving for success with the determination to overcome the many obstacles of life and to leave a mark on the highest rung of the ladder of achievement.

February Valedictory

FACULTY, Classmates, and Friends of the Evening: We come tonight to say farewell to Central—to the old school which, in the words of our Mr. Doolittle, has heard our most amazing recitations for the past four years. The time to which we have long looked forward has at last come, and we find that it is with joy mingled with sadness that we say farewell—for such farewell means good-bye to many of the friends whom we have held dear during our stay at Central. A verse in Ecclesiastes says that there is a time for all things—a time to laugh and a time to weep. To me, it seems that tonight combines those times, for certainly we should rejoice, as graduation is a great achievement, and, though perhaps we do not weep, it is hard to break the ties which bind us to Central.

Tonight we approach a great turning-point in our lives. We leave the old life at high school behind us, and stand on the threshold of a bigger, broader one. Whatever fears and misgivings we have of our success in this new and intricate life are banished by the thought that here at Central we have been trained to meet all emergencies with the courage and good sportsmanship which are requisite to success.

We have learned much here at school. To the faculty we owe the knowledge which has been imparted to us from books. The faculty have also taught us other, and perhaps greater, lessons in showing us what is meant by Central honor, Central courtesy, and Central loyalty. We who are leaving will not forget these lessons in the years to come. The great realm of athletics has taught us that it is good sportsmanship and loyalty that count every time, not only in the competitive games here at school but also in life itself.

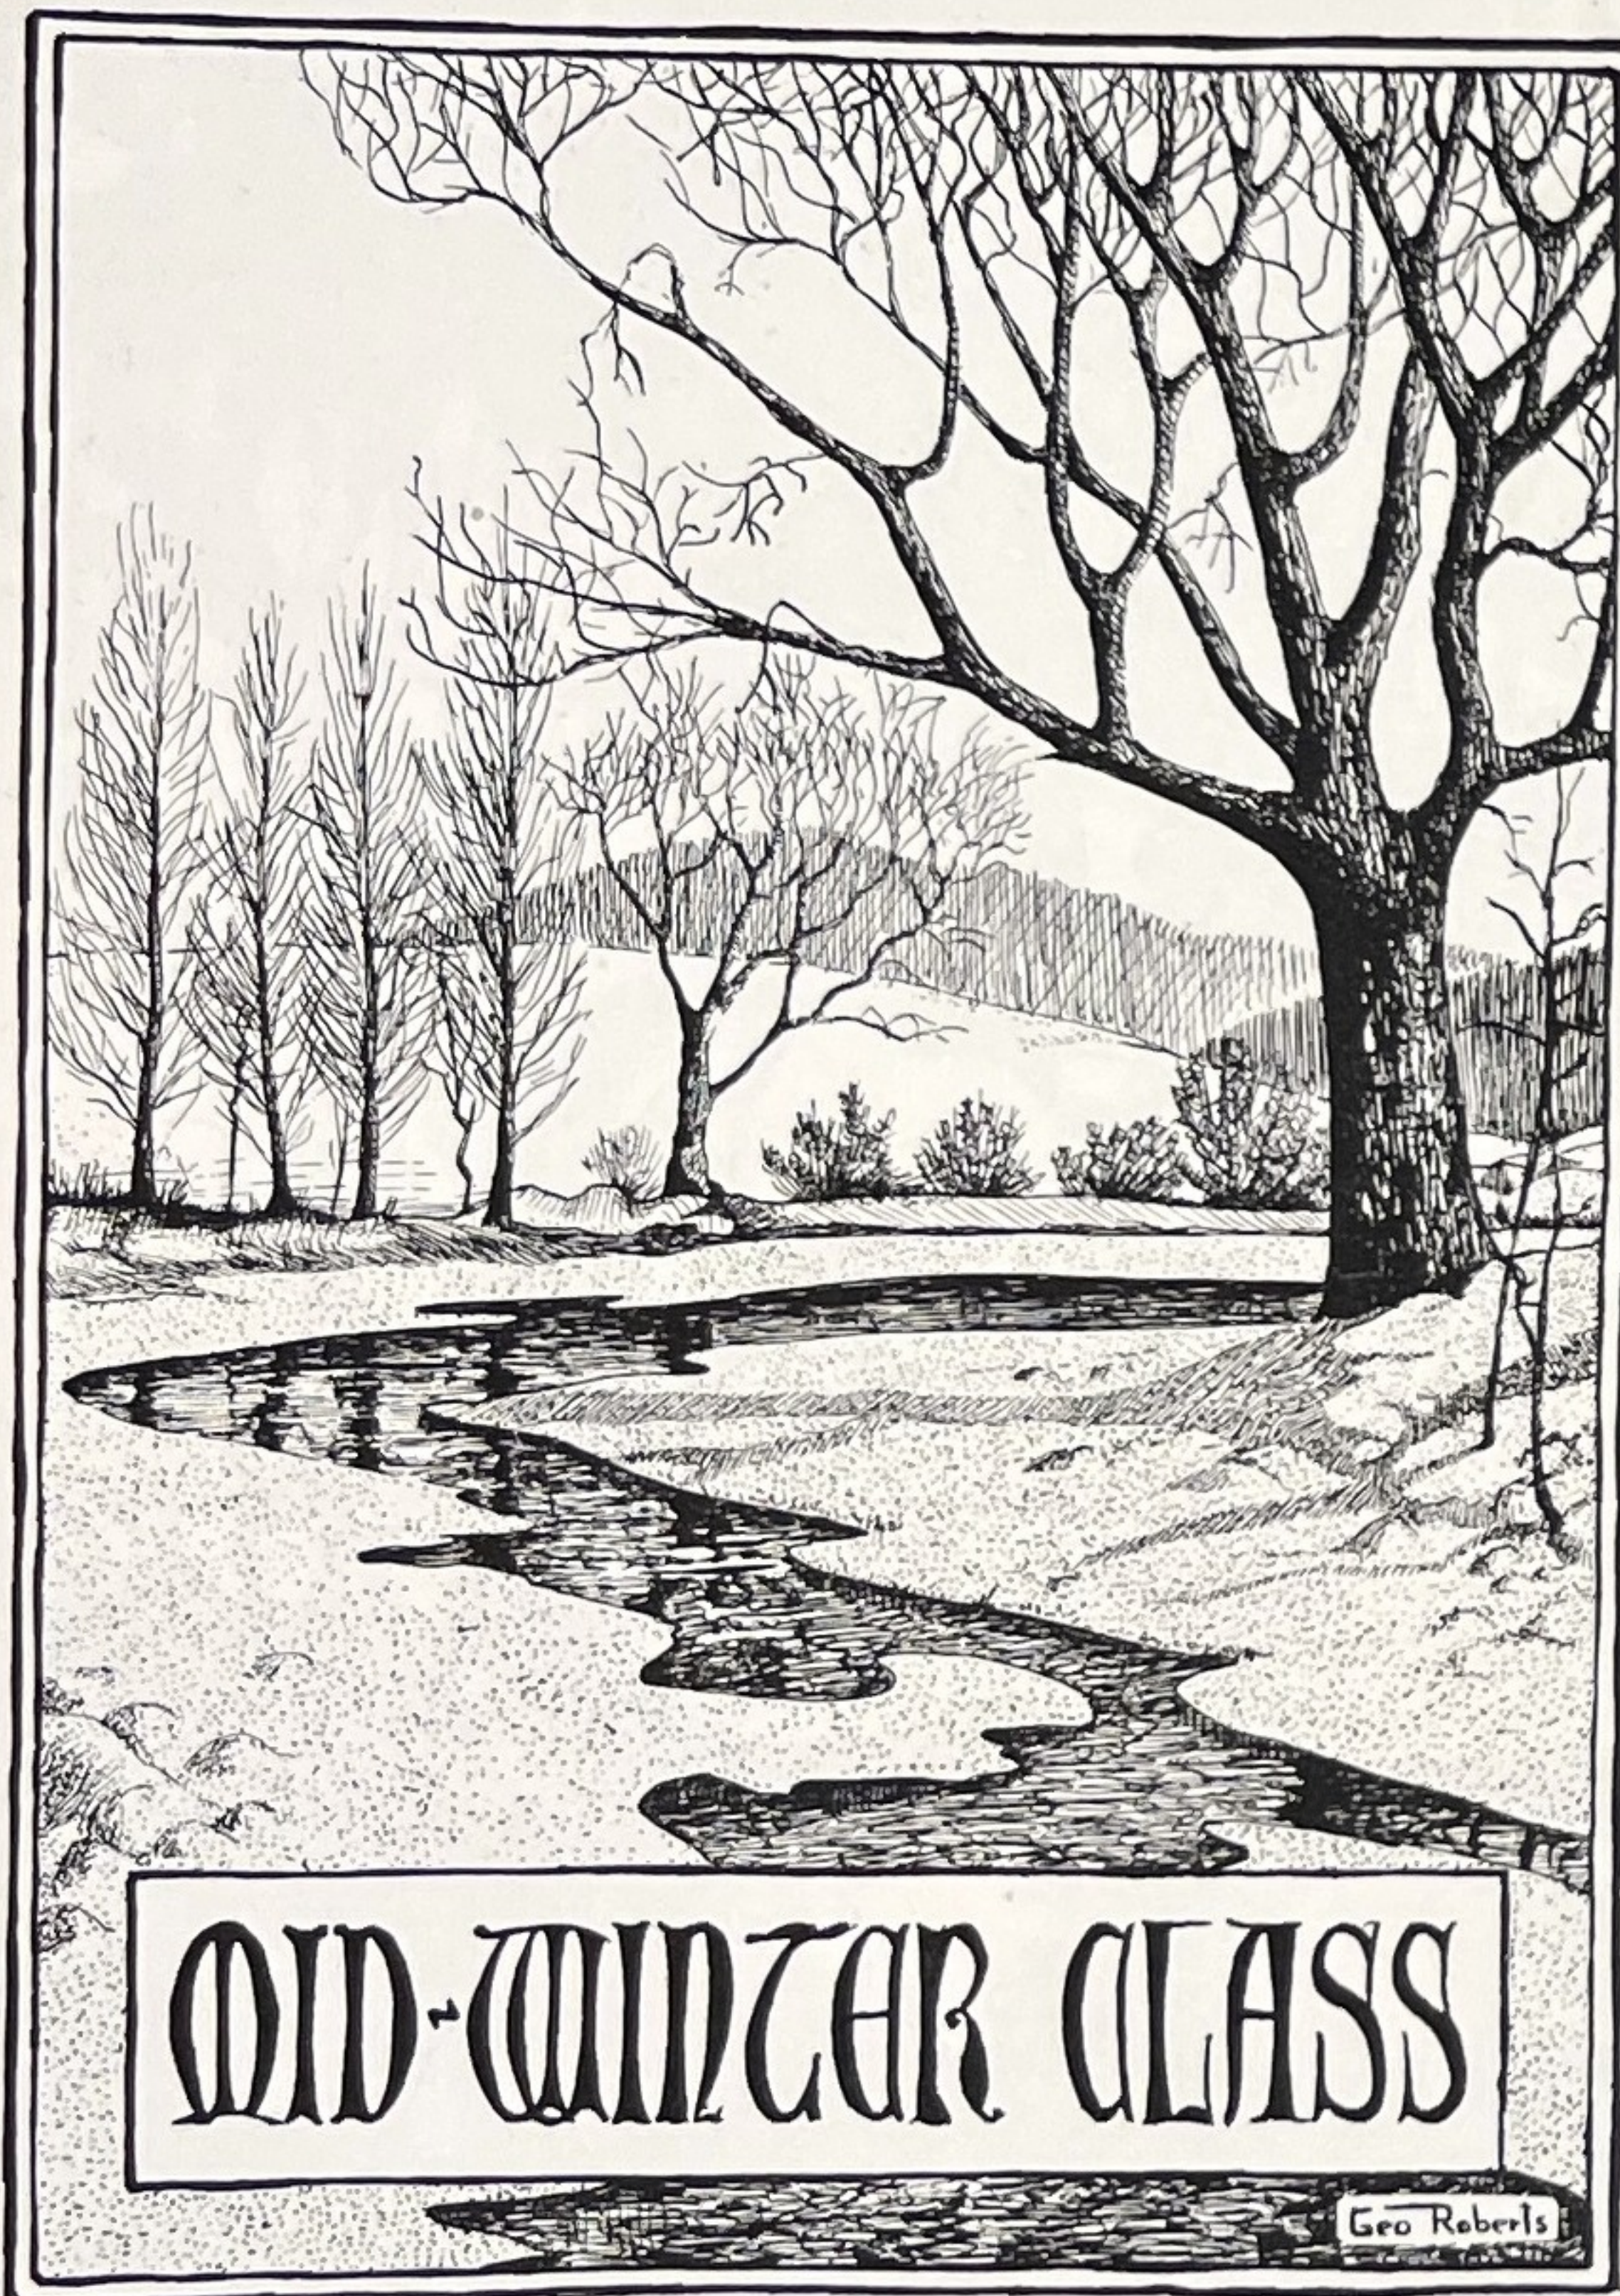

In glancing back over our years at high school we can hardly realize that we have changed from the much-laughed-at rookie to the much-respected senior in our four short years at Central. What innumerable things have wrought this great change in us! Our mathematics, which to many of us have seemed entirely useless, have, nevertheless, given us the satisfaction that comes from achievement. We have studied languages, sciences, history—all to further our power of reasoning as well as to learn the facts contained in those studies.

We have known what it is to work for Central, for there is hardly a person in this class who has not partaken of at least one of her numerous activities. Some of us have not been fortunate enough to be praised and known by everyone for our great deeds, but nevertheless we have worked. We have shared with others in the many little deeds of courtesy and teamwork that make Central the great school she is today.

We have tried as hard as we know how to uphold the time-honored traditions of Central. We have understood as nearly as it is possible to understand that great intangible and yet powerful thing known as Central Spirit. Those who have already left the school know that it is that spirit which still binds them to Central though they are no longer here. It is that spirit which puts the fight into our teams and makes them bring back glorious victories to the old school. It is that same spirit which has guided us through our four years here, and we hope that it will continue to be a beacon-light for us in the future.

Thus we say farewell to Central and pass on into the ever-increasing ranks of her alumni.

RUTH C. HAYS.

June Class Poem

FAIR as the sun, that on the dawn doth burst
In radiant glory, lighting all around
With fire of youth, so fare we forth tonight,
With burning ardor, brightened by the first
Ecstatic taste of Life. Our ears resound
With kind advice. Led by the light
Of Knowledge, guided by the steady hand
Of Conscience, lashed on to greater effort
By stern Ambition's whip, with beating heart
We start on Life's rough way; our aim to stand
Upon the heights, to storm the mighty fort
Of sweet Success, and win for each his part
Of Life's rewards. May always shine before us
Our primal aim: Dum vivimus, vivamus!

To live, yet not to live; it is a fate
That all too many in this world must meet;
Nay, rather say that all too many fail
To show that vital spark until too late,
That vital urge to seek out all that's sweet
In Life, and claim it for their very own.
And does he truly live, who can not see
The lusty beauty of a morn in June?
Who can not feel a joy within his soul
To see the sunset o'er a silver sea,
Or glimpse the gilded glory of the moon?
But we, in love with Life, must make our goal
To grasp the finer things, the purest gleams,
And realize, in turn, our fondest dreams!

Glass History, June, 1926

OW that we are about to join the ranks of Central's alumni, and the goal toward which we have steadfastly progressed is near, we approach it with a mingled feeling of joy and sorrow; joy in the completion of our task, and sorrow in parting. Now, as never before, do we realize the changes wrought in us during our four memorable years spent here. How well do we remember the dignified and austere seniors, who caused many misgivings as to our ability ever to attain such heights! Yet we have scaled that seemingly unattainable eminence, and, standing on its peak, before passing on, it seems only fitting that we should consider in retrospect the outstanding achievements that have marked our upward path.

During our freshman year, we were merely becoming acclimated, and, without our realizing it, that indefinable, most valuable, though intangible thing, "Central spirit," was becoming imbued in us. It was this spirit which caused our elation at Central's victories, and our sorrow at her defeats. Besides cheering Central's teams to championships in football, baseball, and track, we aided in a most important event for Central, the dedication of our stadium to the man who worked so long and tirelessly in obtaining that stadium for us—Emory M. Wilson. The stadium stands a fitting memorial to him and an inspiration to all those who participate in outdoor sports. Mr. Wilson was a true Centralite in every sense of the word, and, though we never knew him, his name is traditional among us for being that of a tireless worker, a good sport, and a sincere friend.

The following year as sophomores, our pride in ourselves was exceeded only by that in Central's achievements. We began to take an active interest in school activities, in which we realized we could really participate with the feeling that we were accomplishing something worth while. It was during this year that we were drawn closer together, resulting in the formation of some of our best and closest friendships.

At the beginning of our sophomore year an outstanding Centralite became lost to us. Our esteemed principal, Robert A. Maurer, who was Mr. Wilson's successor, resigned so that he might continue his historical work at Georgetown University. We deeply regretted losing Mr. Maurer, to whom we were and are devoted, for I feel sure that he has a place deep in the hearts of every one of us.

Stephen E. Kramer, an alumnus of Central, whom we had come to know during our sojourn here, was selected to succeed Mr. Maurer. Although Mr. Kramer stayed with us but a year, we grew into a knowledge of his sterling qualities. During this time Central achieved a championship on the diamond, and won her first victory on the Competitive Drill Field in six years.

In the midst of our junior year another change took place in the administration of Central. This time the vacancy left by Mr. Kramer was filled by Alvin W. Miller, who, as assistant principal, had an enviable record, and who had long since won his way into our esteem.

As juniors, we entered into all branches of school activities, and in many cases we pressed the seniors closely for honors; however, in the main, we were merely preparing for the responsibilities of our senior year. In our earnest preparation for this our bonds of loyalty and ties of friendship were materially strengthened and our ability to achieve become known.

Our first half year under Mr. Miller's guidance was indeed one of triumph for Central, for it resulted in the winning of the basketball championship and second place in the Competitive Drill. Also, our basketball team duplicated its victory of the preceding year by coming out "runner up" in the University of Pennsylvania tournament at Philadelphia.

June Class Valedictory

OUR stay at this harbor of Central has been brought to its inevitable close. The time has come to sail forth into the calling sea. In comparison with our whole journey, these past four years have been but a short pause. We will stop at many ports in the future, but hardly at another on which we can look back with such pleasant memories, as we can tonight, and recall the friendships and school activities, which have concealed the true span of time.

As I look back tonight, my whole being is fired with a spirit of gratitude—a spark which inspires the heart of our whole class. To my mind return those scenes of high school which one could hardly forget. In all of them stand out the teachings that we have received from the different branches of Central. Four years of endeavor by the faculty have made their mark. We go to higher institutions knowing that the education we are to receive is valuable not because it is an accumulation of impracticable knowledge, but because of its underlying principles which are applicable to every-day life. That is the accomplishment that demands our gratitude to the faculty. Moreover, our course has by no means been one of study only. Athletics, cadets, publications, debates, dramatics, and scores of other activities have been ours for the taking. And they did not occupy our time without impressing their lessons upon us. We have learned to fight and to fight squarely, to work and to work hard, to take our losses like a sport, to receive orders from the other fellow, to give our best with no material reward in sight. It is for these phases of school life that we are most grateful. It does seem rather hard to leave all this, but college holds forth an appeal which offsets this loss. In a comparatively short time we shall swing into its life, where we may build upon these very same principles. As we bid Central farewell, our fondest hope is that our achievement will be ample interest on the invaluable foundation that she has invested in the Class of 1926.

And now, as Commencement draws swiftly near—that day which will mark the commencement of a broader existence—we turn and attempt to fathom an unknown future. Just what that future will be we can, to an appreciable degree, foretell. An outline of our lives has already been molded here at Central. As much as lies in each individual's capability we can—and it should be our life's aim to—develop those embryo qualities into a finished product of the most stalwart character. On our shoulders rests the onerous duty of keeping future America in her position of leadership and patronage among the nations. God grant that there is no member of this class so un-American as to evade his duty in this task! Central has completed her portion of the work; shall we not look upon ours with willingness? Our duty lies in fitting ourselves with plenary education, and the opportunity to fulfill that duty is open in every part of the nation. We go out into the future with the realization of what will be expected of us, but with a determination to increase our ability to meet every requirement.

The sea still calls; and I can vividly picture our class' departure tonight. I see a great ship anchored at the harbor of Central; a banner emblazoned with 1926 flies from her mast. The ship has been there for four years, stocking her hold with provisions for the coming journey. And now I see some 500 seamen climb aboard; they are eager, and yet reluctant to leave that trustworthy harbor. Five hundred strong, they draw up the anchor and hoist the wing-like sails; and now that all is in readiness, they look toward the shore and wave a last farewell. The vessel starts slowly, is caught by the stiffening breeze, and now sails bravely out, as the first rays of a brighter dawn gleam over the water's edge.

CHARLES WIDMAYER.

Our City

From Central's Wall

I stood by the wall at Central
At the close of the short winter day,
And at my feet lay the city,
Veiled in a mist of gray.

Veiled in mist and in mystery,
Yet gleaming with beckoning lights;
A city of promise, and work, and joy,
It seemed to youth on the heights.

But far above me there shone a star
With a light as white as truth;
A promise of life above, beyond,
It seemed to the eyes of youth.

CALVERT HINES.

The Band

The Regiment practices

Just before the Drill.

The Competitive Drill

The Perfect Ending of Central's Banner Year

SILENCE—a silence full of awe and anticipation! Silence while the Adjutant stood like a statue out in the center of the field before turning! Those ten counts seemed an eternity. Then—the silence was broken! The Central stands went wild. The Adjutant had turned to the left—toward Central's regiment. The cheers and applause of the enthusiastic Centralites were deafening. Silence once more until Company F was declared the winner! As the company marched out to receive the coveted flag and ribbons, even the music of the band seemed to echo Central's name. The company must have been glad to know how proud the entire school was of its success. Then, when the Adjutant again marched to our regiment to announce second place, the thrill was still greater. More honors were in store for Central, as the Sergeant's Drill was awarded to Rodney Hatcher of Company B.

Less than half an hour later these honored cadets were ushered into Central's banquet hall amid cheers and congratulations. Nothing was too good for any cadet, whether or not he happened to be wearing a ribbon. The school yells resounded throughout the building for the guests, the staff, every company and every cadet. Supplying color to the scene were the beaming senior girl waitresses, who were delighted to be allowed to serve the cadets who had worked all the year for Central.

Immediately after eating, the cadets were ushered up into the auditorium for a rally. How happy everyone looked! What a picture it was to see the two companies on the stage surrounded by Central pennants and flags! Speeches were made by the heroes of the day, whose voices were hoarse, but whose hearts were so full that some of the joy had to come out.

Araminta, the official cadet mascot, was not present, but was not forgotten, for Mr. Maurer in his address said that he felt sure that she had had a share in bringing the flag back to Central.

In lauding the cadets for their triumph, let us not forget that it was Major Donovan who was behind the companies through the entire year.

There were greetings from other guests, but the words of our Major Gray seem to be the best suited to the feelings of every true Centralite. "I'm so happy," he said, "I don't know when I've been happier or felt better before in all my life." And so it is with all of us. We are proud of our cadets, and we want them to know it.

None of us will ever forget the spirit in the assembly on the following morning. The cheers, songs, and speeches challenged every Centralite to do his utmost for Central as the cadets had done.

There have been times when some of us have been discouraged, but the winning of this drill has made a perfect ending to our Banner Year.

DOROTHY RUTH.

rates or established special free schools for the poor, it placed them in the position of recipients of charity and thus repelled many who would have most profited from school experience. From the middle of the nineteenth century, provision was made in the steadily increasing number of states for the adequate support by state and local taxation of schools free to all, rich and poor alike.

There is a generally erroneous idea that the colonists built the schoolhouse soon after towns were settled. As a matter of fact, the meeting house, the grist mill, and the pound all preceded the schoolhouse. Naturally with their religious zeal the church preceded the school; the meeting house was the first public building; and the schoolhouse often waited for more than a generation before it was voted and longer before it was built. Frequently a house was rented or the town hall was used for the school. An old record of Marlboro, N. H., shows that in 1807, $170 was voted for the construction of a new schoolhouse; quite a contrast to the hundreds of thousands of dollars that are appropriated for a modern school.

Early schoolhouses were often very rudely furnished, using barrels with a board on the top for desks. Discipline was rigid, not to say barbarous in the extreme. Punishment was deemed necessary. It was not uncommon to flog pupils until they dropped from exhaustion, or to thrash the palms of their hands until they were covered with blisters.

Out of all this, what? The survival of the fittest, a sturdy, self-contained, self-reliant people—poor readers, poor spellers, but generally good writers, with no knowledge of geography or history or grammar, with little knowledge of arithmetic, but sturdy of character, the genuine American whom we delight to honor.

curricula of schools were discussed. In the afternoon the meeting in the auditorium under Mr. Alvin W. Miller discussed possibilities for more efficient high-school administration and supervision of school activities, while in the Music Room the Junior High School Section held sway.

The fifth and last meeting held at Central told of the function of ideals in the high-school curriculum and some by-products of high-school education.

Dr. Frank W. Ballou was the guest of honor at a luncheon given in the ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel on February 22, under the Education Association of the District of Columbia, of which Harry English is president. The toastmaster was Dr. Randall J. Condon, of Cincinnati. Other speakers were Dr. W. W. Lewis, president of George Washington University, and Dr. Payson Smith, superintendent of the schools of Boston, Mass. Central's faculty was well represented by Mr. Alvin W. Miller, Mr. Norman J. Nelson, Mr. William J. Wallis, Mr. George Ross, Miss C. I. Orr, Miss Emily F. Sleman, Miss Anne McColm, Mrs. Willett, and Miss H. C. Lasier.

should have been in the Clef Club. It really is great fun (I'm still in it), and I will miss the companionship of the girls as much as the valuable instruction received there." As Gene seemed to want to put a word in, Peggy gave in.

"Yes, I had fun my Junior year, and, as you say, I especially enjoyed playing in the Orchestra. But I believe we all agree that this year, our Senior year, is the best and jolliest of all. I've had a glorious time around school this year, including the time spent in the Music Room. I've learned to understand Mr. Wood's witticisms, which used to sound so terrible when we were Rookies."

Peggy made use of the opportunity to say something more. "Do you know," mused Peggy, "I don't believe that the majority of us appreciate what an unusual opportunity is offered us by the Music Department until we are almost ready to leave Central. In this case I don't think it is nice to save the surprises until last, do you?"

But before Gene could answer, the bell rang. What would your answer be?

"Two boys are employed here daily, each one working half a day. In order to make their programs fit in with their working hours, an afternoon pupil works in the morning and vice versa."

Our journey was about ended, but on our way back to the office we passed Room 1, Mr. Hodgkins' headquarters. Two girls were poring over cards in long drawers. "These are some more girls from the Office Training Class. They help Mr. Hodgkins with all the work connected with the Central High School Alumni Association."

Our time was short, so I hurriedly told my guest that we had had a glimpse of every phase of our student cooperation, save the Office Training pupils who work in the Library, and directed him back to the office.

Dramatics in Central High

anything so stupendous as The Bluebird. But Central put it over, as it has a way of doing in everything. We of the class of June, 1926, are fortunate to have The Bluebird as the last and freshest play in our memory, for the bluebird is the symbol of happiness, and who is not searching for happiness as he goes onward from high school?

For the past four years the Brown University Alumni of Washington have offered a cup to the Washington high school presenting the best Spring Play. The first two years Central had little trouble in winning the cup. Last year, however, the judges awarded it to Business. This year it went to Eastern, but we hope that it will return to Central next spring.

It would be hardly fitting to close this article without mentioning Miss Sibyl Baker and her corps of splendid assistants. Central is fortunate in having Miss Baker to coach its plays, for she is known throughout the city as one of the best directors in amateur dramatic work. Her work on The Bluebird is little short of miraculous. She successfully superintended the directing of 150 students, and the work which the other activities were doing for the play and turned the whole into a glorious and beautiful production.

With best wishes to Miss Baker, the other members of the Faculty Committee, and the Dramatic Association, we throw the torch to other hands. "Be theirs to hold it high."

BENJAMIN A. P. DOEHRER.

Class History, June, 1926

In face of defeats of the past few years, this year, our last, was inaugurated "Central's Banner Year" in a supreme effort to place Central in a preeminent position in achievement. The spirit of this movement was not confined to a single activity or group of activities, but was absorbed by all. A flying start was obtained when our football team attained its first championship in three years. Following this, the basketball team, as defending champion, tied with Eastern for the championship. At present, all indications points to a successful conclusion of Central's Banner Year.

In tribute to our principal, Mr. Miller, it must be said that since his assuming the position at our head, Central's vanguard has rolled smoothly on its way, successfully flattening the obstacles in its path which threatened to disturb its journey. We extend to Mr. Miller our sincere hopes that his efforts in guiding Central's destinies may always continue successful in the same degree.

Now, with the curtain falling upon the fourth and final act of our play, we pause to pay last homage to the school, which, through friendships and memories, is unforgettably enshrined in our hearts. We try to look into the future, but fail. Through the distance we see a hand extended. To that hand we fling Central's flaming torch, which we have so lately borne. It is the hand of those who follow us. In its keeping we place Central, with the admonition, "Carry on!"

Complete Courses in Pharmacy Chemistry, Bacteriology and Pharmacognosy

Never in history have the arts and industries held greater promise of success in chemical and scientific work than at the present day. On the eve of graduation, High School students should weigh carefully the advantages offered by this widely-known Institution for thorough instruction in Pharmacy, Chemistry and Allied Sciences.

Full courses for degrees, and special courses in research work. Fall Semester begins September 22.

A cordial invitation is extended to the graduating class and their parents to visit the College and see for themselves the up-to-date research laboratories, equipment, libraries and lecture rooms. Catalog now ready.

USE MORE ELECTRICITY

The Cheapest Item in the Family Budget

Electricity is the cheapest thing you use in your home. It is dependable. It is the cleanest servant working for you—right at your finger tips. It never sleeps—never loafs and takes no vacation—winter or summer. It is all up to you as a Manager to make it wash, iron, sew, cook, heat or cool the atmosphere for you—why not employ it more?

Try to sell a house today in Washington that is not equipped with electricity—and realize how much this faithful service is worth!

Consult your Electrical Contractor and have him put plenty of convenient outlets in your home—make it a Happy Home because it is an Electrical Home.

OUR GUARANTEE

The best of pure, rich, fresh cream is the basis of CARRY'S Delicious Ice Cream and all its other ingredients are also the best procurable. CARRY'S is made in a well lighted, well ventilated and sanitary plant, where the most modern machinery is used throughout. An important feature of this plant is its well equipped laboratory, wherein competent specialists are constantly at work testing ingredients, during the making of CARRY'S Delicious Ice Cream, so that the purity of the finished product is assured. The entire mix is homogenized and is pasteurized at a temperature of 160° for 45 minutes.
